Childhood Emotional Neglect (CEN) happens when you grow up in a family that does not “see” the emotions of anyone in it. In the CEN family, feelings are treated as if they are irrelevant or even inconvenient or weak. Children in these families learn to ignore and hide their own feelings. CEN literally teaches you to avoid. Avoid feelings, avoid meaningful topics, avoid, avoid, avoid.

Families And How To Survive Them: Cleese, John, Skynner

Travelling home to see the family, buying gifts, enjoying a warm hot chocolate on a cold winter night. Bliss! But for many others, it brings anything but cheer. For them, Christmas means putting up with family members they don't get on well with, constant bickering or even all-out arguments. If you're one of the latter, don't worry.

Families and How to Survive Them - Wikipedia

Children, when growing up in a home like this, have to adapt to survive. They do so to protect themselves from an environment which is far from ideal. In addition, they are observing dysfunctional behavior patterns that they will probably imitate when they are adults.
