Raw roasts, steaks, and chops (beef, veal, lamb, and pork) for human consumption should be used within 3 to 5 days. In contrast, raw food for pet consumption should be used within 7 days. Some dogs and cats have been observed caching raw food and returning to consume the food at a later date. This puts the raw food in the temperature danger zone for an extended period of time outside of the CDC's recommendation for refrigerating food for human consumption.
